Jamerson Plumbing Hires Marketing Firm

The Jamerson Plumbing Services company based in Southport, N.C., has hired a marketing firm to help expand its regional reach.

For years, Robert Jamerson Jr. has focused on providing quality plumbing work he expects to find in his own house. His residential plumbing work appears in homes across the region, although people never see it.

“That is the idea behind our plumbing installation and repair. You don’t want to know it is there. If you know it’s there, then you have a problem,” he said. “Leaks let you know your plumbing has an issue. Clogged pipes can create problems that go beyond the pipes.”

Mr. Jamerson has found more water leaks than he can count. Each one his company finds and repairs is a saving for the customer.

“A leak in the yard is bad enough. That is water you have to pay for, but you don’t use, but it probably won’t hurt anything. If you are on a well, then you are paying to pump water you are not using,” he said. “If that leak is the house, if you don’t get it fixed, it will cost you thousands in home repair, plus the cost of fixing the leak.”

While he has focused on water and drain lines, his customers have put their attention on his service. Word of mouth is a great business builder, he said.

“At the same time, my customers keep telling me I need to do more to reach out and talk about the company. Well, I have the same amount of time you do every day. I can use that time to market my company, or I can use it to have the best plumbing service around,” he said. “That is a no-brainer. I am a plumber.”

To that end, Mr. Jamerson has partnered with the Soaring Away marketing company. Soaring Away owner Holly Powell said she is also pleased with the arrangement.

"We do not accept just anyone. We looked into Robert and his company and learned what so many people already know. He is a professional and provides quality plumbing work. Upon learning that, we gladly agreed to work with him," Ms. Powell said.
